

Please Join us to Learn & Discuss 'Sustainable Consciousness'

Co-sponsored by Portland's United Nations Regional Center of Excellence (GPSEN) and

Portland State University's 'Indigenous Nations Studies' Program

With a Presentation by Milt Markewitz, and

A Panel of Portland State's 'Critical Thinkers'

January 19, 2016 from 6:00-9:00pm at the PSU Native American Center, 710 SW Jackson St., Portland 97201

Paraphrasing Albert Einstein, "The consciousness that creates a problem isn't sufficient for solving it."

The problem we're concerned with is Global Climate Change as it continues to accelerate and threaten our very existence.

Fortunately the essence of the ecological and social consciousness we are seeking has been lived for millennia by Peoples around the World.

The presentation will address key differences between the developed world's and Indigenous Peoples' consciousness.

These differences address how we think, discern the world, make decisions, and relate to all life. They may seem overwhelming.

But we'll also share some processes and teachings for incorporating Indigenous wisdom into our individual and institutional lives.

Our intent, through messages that resonate deeply within us, is to create both a sense of hope and the will to change.
